SJB SELECTION · NOVEMBER 2026

You look for love everywhere. In other people. In the wrong places. In promises. Then maybe you discover the problem wasn’t searching too much. It was always looking in the same direction.

“Show Me Love” starts from exactly this movement.

The initial search is emotional, almost sentimental.

Then the centre shifts.

What seemed like a desire to be loved becomes the recognition of a love tied to faith.

Gospel and R&B end up in the same room.

The voice has a sweet flavour.

The rhythm stays gentle.

It’s an earthly spirituality: something that looks upwards but keeps speaking the language of everyday emotions.

The production opens slowly, like a window letting in more and more light.

No wall separates human feeling from spiritual feeling.

One becomes almost the grammar needed to understand the other.

> “Show Me Love” doesn’t try to establish where human love ends and spiritual love begins. It lets them approach, brush against each other and blur enough to sound like the same question.
